व

व The twenty ninth consonant. The sound initially, though not exactly that of W, approaches to it so closely that this short notice of the difference will suffice. But medially or finally when the letter occurs in composition (with य or र) as in द्रव्य, अनंतव्रत &c, or when reduplicated, as in चवीस, the sound becomes, from the prolongation of the vowel preceding it, rather the thicker sound of our V. By some, this letter in the combinations वि, वो, वे & वै seems to be sounded as V: and in Bengal probably it is V in whatever combination; but neither of these two points need be regarded by the student of Murat,hee. This letter is frequently interchanged with ब

व conj (, A) And. Between this copulative and आणि there is a difference. They agree in joining together in one proposition, or under the same predication, two or more members or subjects: as; “He and I came”, “Day and night are alike”: but where conjunction is to be effected of sentences or clauses expressing different truths, or exhibiting, the one, a cause, ground, reason &c, the other, an effect, consequence, accompaniment &c; there, not व but only आणि can be used. Ex मी आलों आणि तो गेला; स्वयं उगवला आणि मी उठलों; तो काळा आणि हा गेरा &c.

Under this word we may introduce the remark, that, very many of the words, which we have inserted under ओ, are also written and pronounced with व. That mode of writing and pronouncing is decidedly more conformable with etymology, and with the form of spelling observed in Prakrit books, as well as with the practice of those who are viewed as the purest speakers of Murat,hee; and this mode seems to be the mode general with the vulgar and unlearned above the G,hat. N. B. We are speaking, not of वो, but of व. As the words are numerous, to have omitted them altogether, would have occasioned much inconvenience: to have inserted them all with all their explanations, would, more inconveniently, have enlarged the Dictionary. In order to attain the advantage of saving the learner some trouble of reference, and to avoid the evil of augmenting the volume, we have inserted and explained those words of which the explanation could be comprised within a line or two lines, and the remainder we have, still with regard to their place alphabetically, strung together, and marked as requiring to be sought, in their order, at ओ. This plan, it may be added, has been observed, with respect to minor and less systematical variations of spelling, throughout the Dictionary; and, accordingly, as it is viewed in the light of saving vexation and labour, or in the light of swelling and aggravating a mass, it will be commended or condemned. It must receive therefore both these awards; but to the party disposed to censure we would suggest, that they direct their censure, not to this our arrangement, but to the vastness, the indeterminateness, and the wild and irreducible anomalousness, as of all languages merely colloquial, so particularly and pre-eminently of this language the Murat, hee.

विंगळ, विंगळा, विंगळो, विंगा This seems to be a mis-spelling through the mispronunciation, by the vulgar, of इंगळ, इंगळा &c, which See in order. Note. This cacoepe by the vulgar is of extensive application; but, as it is well known to be, not peculiar to the Murāt,ha people, but common, with them, to the vulgar of most nations, it need not be noticed further. It is noticed even in this slight manner, solely because it might be thought that, in the case of mere Murāt,hee words, accuracy between the mode of pronouncing with इ and the mode of pronouncing with वि could not, with any positiveness, be determined. Accordingly, the mispronunciations and mis-spellings of विश्वर for ईश्वर, विच्छा, for इच्छा, and, vice versa, of इचार for विचार, इन्न for विन्न and a thousand others, being plain corruptions, by the unlearned, of Sanskrit words thoroughly established and generally current in the language, are unnoticed altogether.

Whilst the discomposing action expressed by this verb is, invariably, viewed as violent and as detrimental to the subject of it, that expressed by the other verb may be viewed simply as a scattering or displacing, whether with injurious effect upon the subject of it, or without such effect, and with a specific and sufficient purpose. 2 Sometimes used in the senses of उचकटणे where See at large.

Under this verb we may note the close correspondence which the three verbs बोलणे, म्हणणे, & सांगणे bear, respectively, to the English verbs Speak, Say, and Tell. बोलणे is To speak, to utter, to make vocal expression or an articulate sound. (Without implication whether of any subject or sense delivered, or any person or object addressed.) बोलणे accordingly is, like the verb "To speak," used of the Sounding of a musical instrument. म्हणणे is To say, to utter or express some thought or sense, to deliver or give vent to matter. (Without implication, still, of any object addressed.) सांगणे is To tell, to communicate a matter unto. (With implication, therefore, both of a subject or sense delivered, and of a person or object addressed.) Thus बोलणे is rather an intransitive verb, म्हणणे & सांगणे transitive. These correspondencies hold very intimately, and thus should be borne vividly in the mind; yet, as the verbs To speak, say, and tell, are, notwithstanding their different aspect and bearing, in some certain applications, mutually interchangeable, so likewise are the verbs बोलणे, म्हणणे, & सांगणे sion, be equally correct, and the import, though altered, equally congruous.
